FOREWORD

It has long been an accepted truism that breeding counts in the human family as well as in animal. In the families more especially considered in this chronological history, there are mingled the blood of the fiery, decisive French (the Allions) with the grim stickto-itive of the Tuton (the Deningers, Vollmers, and Haags) and the rustic sympathetic integrity of the Swiss (the Meisters, Kellers and Warners,) all commingled into the sturdy, patriotic, loyal true American, who loves his home, loves his country, loves his fellowman and believes in the Golden Rule and puts his belief into practice.

It is well enough to love the land of our fathers but first of all, above all and all in all is the land that gives us our sustenance, that gives us our liberties, that protects our homes and our loved ones and makes possible our being what we are. our valorous, majestic grand U. S. A. May the decendants of the families herein concerned ever stand, in the future as in the past, for the valor, purity and integrity, of the old Red, White and Blue.

A brief account of the First Settlement in German Township, Fulton County, O., written by J. W. Roseborough, in June 1896, from information gleaned from Rev. Jacob Bender, one of the original pioneers.

BY H. D. MEISTER

The township of German was organized in 1840, and belonged at that time to Lucas county. Fulton county was organized in 1850, from territory belonging previously to Lucas, Henry and Williams counties. The first settlers of German township arrived and began the first settlement in the township August 23rd 1834, at what is now called Lauber's Hill, two miles east of Burlington. The manner of the settlement, and by whom made, will appear in the course of the following sketch of the life of Mr. Binder, a member of one of the families making the said first settlement.

Jacob Binder, the fifth child, and only son of Jacob and Mary (Stuckey) Bender, was born near Mulhausen, in Alsace,—then a part of France, now of Germany—May 11, 1826. The eldest child of the family was Catherine, afterwards the wife of Aaron Mead. The next, Anna who became the wife of Jacob G. Wildin. The third, Barbara, married Jacob Lantz. Mary, the fourth child, first married Samuel Burkholder, and after his death, John Leininger, Sr. Sophrona, the daughter next younger than Jacob, became the wife of Michael Figy Regina, the youngest daughter, married Jacob, the brother of Michael Figy.

On the 8th day of March 1834, Mr. Binder and family, together with Christian Lauber and Christian Rupp, and their respective families, all of Alsace, in the vicinity of Mulhausen, a city about 18 miles from the northwest boundary line of Switzerland, started for America. Mr. Lauber's family consisted of his wife, Magdalena (Zimmerman) and four children—Magdalene, later the wife of John Rupp; Elizabeth, afterwards the wife of Nicholas Roth; Barbara who married Peter Short, and Christian Jr., who married Catherine Wyse, sister of John F. and Peter Wyse. Mr. Rupp's family was composed of himself and wife, Christina (Stuckey) and four children—Christian Jr., who married Magdalene Roth; Anna, who married John Wyse, brother of Christian Wyse; Christina, who became the wife of Jacob King, and Magdalene, who married Moses Burkholder. These three families, numbering twenty-one in all, started together, as we have stated, for America, March 8th, 1834. They employed three teams and wagons and drove through to Havre, France, in 17 days. Here they were detained some two weeks waiting for a vessel. About the 8th of April they took ship and sailed for New York, consuming about seven weeks in the voyage. The trip was long and tedious. Sometimes the ocean was perfectly smooth no wind whatever being in motion, at which time the ship stood motionless. They reached New York the latter part of June, without special accident or loss. Great was their joy upon first beholding the New World and especially were they impressed and delighted with the sight of the Metropolis of America, as viewed from the approaching ship. The city with its great buildings, lofty spires and long ranges of evergreen trees presented a spectacle beautiful and magnificent to behold. On their way across the ocean they were passed by a large vessel, containing many emigrants from Schaffhausen, Switzerland, bound also for America. Our three families remained only a short time in New York. From that city they came to Buffalo by way of Albany. From Buffalo they came on the lake to Cleveland; thence they went on the canal to the little town of Fulton in Stark county where they were met by one Petr Schrock, and a number of other generous Amish brethren, who conveyed them to their comfortable homes in the vicinity of what is now called Marshallville, Wayne County, Ohio. Here they remained and visited their well to do friends for six weeks. Their entertainers were blessed with fine farms and handsome buildings. These or similar ones, our newly arrived immigrants were unable to purchase, having but a limited supply of means. During the six weeks the Mulhausen families remained in Wayne County they met there a number of the emigrants from Schaffhausen, Switzerland who had passed them on the ocean on the large ship. Though they had resided some fifty miles apart in their native land and were previously not personally acquainted, they were all Amish. Of these families from Switzerland were the following: 1st, Jacob Kibler and wife Susan (Meister) and seven children—Jacob, George, Heronimus, Elizabeth, Mary, Susan and Melchior. Jacob married Elizabeth Yost, Heronimus married Barbara Schlatter, Elizabeth married Jacob Lehman, Mary married Daniel Zimmerman, Susan married John Bernath, Melchior died young.

2nd, John George Meister and wife (Margaret Keller) and 12 children—Susan, later the wife of Peter Keifer; Jacob; George, whose first wife was Magdalene Allion, and whose second was Elizabeth Myers; Anna, who became the wife of Christian Zimmerman; John; Fanny, afterwards the wife of Christian Gautsche; Margaret, later the wife of Joseph Noward; Mary, the wife of Harmon Spengler; Christian, who married Pauline Allion; Benedict, who married first Anna Allion, and after her death, Susan Ernst; Daniel, who married Sophia Myers. Besides those we have just named, Mr. and Mrs. Meister had four other children, of these two died in Europe when young, one in Switzerland, the other at Rouen (France) while the parents were on their way to America. Two, Joseph and John were born in America. Joseph never married. John married Elizabeth Zimmerman, sister of Jacob Zimmerman, and daughter of Daniel and Mary Kibler Zimmerman.

3rd, John VanGundy, a widower, having four children two boys and two girls. Barbara, the eldest child later became the wife of Rudolph Eyer, and died near Bloomington, Ill. Anna died single in Butler county, O. John who is of the same age as Mr. Jacob Binder, our subject, is now an Amish minister in one of the western states. Joseph, the youngest, died in Providence, on the way out from Wayne county.

Our immigrants, in view of their large families and limited means, after due consultation, resolved to go further west, and select lands for themselves. The following persons were chosen to make selections: Jacob Kibler, J. George Meister, Christian Rupp and Peter Wyse. Mr. Wyse, a resident of Wayne county accompanied them in the capacity of guide and interpreter. In the meantime the rest of the immigrants remained in Wayne county. The committee appointed proceeded on foot to Putnam county, but finding there the land too level and wet and solid timber too scarce, they went into the vicinity of Ft. Wayne, Ind. There they found the land and timber much the same as in Putnam county. From Ft. Wayne they came back to Defiance, O. There they heard of one Joseph Bates, eighteen miles north, a noted hunter, and a man with a broad and accurate knowledge of the country. Mr. Bates then lived on what is now known as the John Shilling farm in the southwestern part of Franklin township, Fulton county. To him they gladly came. They found him to be the man they exactly needed; brave, active, generous, and thoroughly posted on the conditions of the country and the needs of new settlers. He gave them a cordial reception and took them six miles east of his place to what is now called Lauber's Hill, and now one of the richest and most beautiful sections to be found anywhere in our state, but then a wild and dreary wilderness. Here they resolved to locate. They selected eight hundred acres of land, went to the U. S. land office at Wapakoneta, and entered the same, after which they returned to Wayne county, having spent two weeks in the business and having done all the traveling on foot. The next important practical question that presented itself to the newcomers was how, with their families and goods, to reach their newly acquired lands in the wild woods, a hundred and sixty or more miles distant. To accomplish this, five wagons and five yoke of oxen were purchased. Each of the five families that went to the new homes, purchasing a wagon and yoke of oxen. The following are the families and persons who first came to what is now German township and made the first settlement therein:

1st, Jacob Binder and wife and the following of his children: Anna, Jacob, Sophronia and Regina. Mr. Binder's other daughters came a little later.

2nd, Christian Lauber, wife and four children.

3rd, Jacob Kibler and the following of his children - Jacob, George, Heronimus, Elizabeth and Mary. Mrs. Kibler, Susan and Maechter remained for a time in Wayne county.

4th, J. George Meister, and the following of his children - Jacob, George, John and Anna. His wife and the other children came on later.

5th, John VanGundy and his three children, Joseph, the fourth and youngest of his four children, aged two or three years, died, as stated above, on the way out. Accompanying these families were Nicholas King, Samuel Burkholder, Christian Riegsecker, and Nicholas Gehr, otherwise called Nicholas Wenger, because Mrs. Wenger, a widow lady, brought him to this country from Switzerland. Gehr entered, for Mrs. Wenger, who remained in Wayne county, the west half of the southeast quarter of section 10, town seven north range five east, and underbrushed about an acre of it, then returned to Wayne county with King and Burkholder, who had only come with the settlers to aid them in getting started. Mr. Gehr was a man of education and ability and a fine German writer. In the Cleveland "Kirchen Zeitung" of January 14, 1896, appeared from his pen, in German, a very interesting, accurate and graphical account of the first settlement of German township, in 1834. He became an able minister in the Reformed church, resided in Philadelphia, Pa., and died a short time since aged about 80 years. In their journey to the west our immigrants came through Wooster, Ashland, Lower Sandusky, now Fremont, to Perrysburgh where they crossed the Maumee river. In crossing the river, there being then no bridge, Mr. Binder, with his wagon, struck a large stone, and but for the help of others would have been unable to have extricated himself. Having crossed the river they proceeded westward to Napoleon, which place they reached after a very tedious journey with ox teams of about one hundred and sixty miles, having traveled at the rate of about ten miles a day. At this time there was but one house in Napoleon, and that was a log house. This, our subject thinks, was occupied in part at least, by a man named Wolfe, others say by a Mr. Hinton. It is not improbable that at that time, both of these men lived in the house. How from Napoleon, to reach their point of destination, nearly twenty miles north and west through a dense and trackless forest, was a present, pressing and perplexing question. They finally decided to employ a surveyor to locate the most direct route. They estimated that no more than two days would be required to do this. Eight men accompanied the surveyor to "blaze" trees, and otherwise assist in the work. At the end of the first day the company found that they had advanced only eight miles. Here in the thick woods and countless myriads of mosquitoes they were compelled to camp for the night. Realizing that their supply of food for the trip was inadequate they dispatched two of their men to Napoleon for additional rations, the remaining men continuing the survey. Instead of at Lauber's Hill, the surveyors came out where the village of Burlington now is, two miles west of the point aimed at. When they finally reached the place sought it was night and they were without food, shelter or bed to sleep on. To still further add to their discomfort a heavy rain and thunder storm came on, and they all became thoroughly wet to the skin. They built a large fire and stood about it with clothes wringing wet, the long, long night through, the wind blowing, the tops of the trees waving, the thunder roaring and the lightning flashing at a fearful rate most of the night. In the morning without supper or breakfast without sleep or rest, and still wet, they had no alternative but to begin their return trip to Napoleon. Fortunately for them, about noon they met the two men with the provisions ordered. Scarcely ever, perhaps was food devoured with kenner relish. The night following they camped where they had done the first night of the survey. The next day they reached Napoleon having spent four days on the trip. Here they found six of their companions down sick with those, other plagues of the west, fever and ague. Orders, however were at once issued, for all who had "hands and feet" to lay hold and help open a road on the surveyed line, the wagons and all together advancing as the road was opened. At meal times forks were driven into the ground, on which poles were placed. On these pots for cooking were hung. Water was secured, such as it was, from holes dug two or three feet in the ground. At night they slept in their wagons and otherwise, as best they could, and fought mosquitoes with fire and smoke. After eleven long days spent in severe toil and slow movement, they finally reached August 22nd, 1834, the point in the forest where they proposed to make their future homes. Here in the deep woods, without a house or a foot of cleared land, strangers, unacquainted with the laws of the country, and with its general customs and language, more than four thousand miles from their native land, totally ignorant of frontier life, and of its methods and instruments of labor, many of them too, already sick, and thirty miles or more from market or doctor, the situation was gloomy indeed.

In the face of all these difficulties and discouragements the heroic people resolved bravely to persevere in there effort to make for themselves independent homes. For a time they slept in their wagons and under roofs constructed of brush and leaves. The first house built was a cabin about 20X24 feet on Mr. Christian Lauber's land, about thirty rods north of the site of the brick house in which Samuel Lauber, a grandson, now resides. By reason of sickness, six men of all the settlers were able to help put up the house. Joseph Bates and his hired man kindly came about six miles and greatly assisted in raising the building. It took them two days of hard labor to erect it. There was not a nail in any of the early houses. Other buildings of a similar character were soon after erected for the different other families on their respective lands, except that for Mr. Binder, because of his disability occasioned by continued illness for six months, a small cabin was built near Mr. Lauber's house and on his land. Of this small cabin about twelve by fourteen feet, one half the floor was made of split puncheons. The other half was the ground. In this shanty, without chimney, the fire being built on the ground, the Binder family spent their first winter in America. Their little cabin, our subject tells us, was often so full of smoke that the inmates were often very nearly strangled. In the spring he says the family and goods in house were about the color of smoked ham. While smoke by times thus gave the settlers annoyance, it did them at other times, and not infrequently at the same time, almost invaluable services in shielding them from the ravenous assault of the numberless hosts of mosquitoes that pestered them night and day, much of the time except winters. Except Mr. Kibler, the settlers were poor, and for a number of years experienced much difficulty in procuring sufficient quantities of provisions for their families, in provender for their cattle. They had to go to Maumee to mill and market, and to reach it for want of any other road, had to go by the way of Napoleon. This made the distance about forty-five miles. It generally took about a week's time to drive there and back with their ox teams, over such roads as they then had. The roads especially in wet weather, were often next to impassable. To illustrate their hardships of this kind we will relate one instance.

On one occasion, Mr. Lauber and another of the settlers, took a wagon and two yoke of oxen and went to Maumee for provisions. On their way back they reached Brush Creek, about two miles distant from their homes. The creek at that time was wide and deep, the ground beneath soft, and from the long journey with the wagon and load, over bad roads, the oxen were jaded and tired. Still, impelled by a keen sense of their nearness to their homes, and with the knowledge of the necessity of being there with the provisions, they urged the oxen into and half way across the stream. There, however, the oxen stopped, being entirely exhausted. All effort to get them to move on were fruitless. It was night, and the men left oxen unyoked and wagon and went to their homes. Returning next morning they found the wagon and oxen where they had left them the evening before. It was cold, and during the night, ice had frozen over the creek. The tails of the cattle were actually frozen fast in the ice. The men broke the ice over the water, waded in and drove the oxen out and home, leaving the wagon and provisions. The following night the ice froze so solid that the men came the next day and slid the provisions over the stream on the ice.

Sometimes, from waiting too long before starting to mill or from detention on the way, the settlers came near perishing for want of food. Raccoons, woodchucks, the flesh of animals that had starved to death, wild weeds, vegetables, not esteemed fit for human food and bran and water mixed, were used for food in order to keep soul and body together. Our subject says he has himself actually fainted for want of food. For the cattle, for sometime after the settlement began, little grass or hay could be secured. To keep their cattle alive winters, they had no horses for years; trees were cut down by the settlers that their animals might eat the tops, which they did with great eagerness. Quite a number, however, of their oxen and cows, in spite of all their efforts, died from want of feed. Why, it may be asked, did not these people kill wild game in the woods where, in large numbers, such game abounded? The answer is, those people were not hunters, and had, for quite a time, neither guns nor ammunition. Our subject now nearly seventy years of age, and for sixty-two years a resident of this vicinity, says he never had any relish for hunting. He, in common with the rest of the first settlers, very much preferred chopping, rail-making and clearing to hunting or fishing. He says that through his life he has observed that those who made the most money, and prospered best, were those who most faithfully stuck to their work and their farms. But for the faithful services and kindness of his three sisters, Catherine, Anna and Barbara, who obtained at from fifty to seventy-five cents a week, employment among residents along the Maumee river, Mr. Binder tells us, he believes his father's family would have certainly perished. As small and seemingly insignificant as were their wages, these brave girls not only supported themselves therewith, but mainly for several years, their father's family.

What we wrote some years ago of these heroic pioneer daughters we shall here repeat: "Soon after Mr. Binder came into the woods, his three daughters, Catherine, Anna and Barbara, all young women, went out to work. Barbara went to Providence, Anna to Napoleon, and Catherine to some point nine miles from the latter place. About the first of January, 1836 Catherine became homesick and resolved to go home. The distance was twenty-four miles, all of which had to be traversed on foot. From Napoleon to her home in German was still a dense, unbroken wilderness. She started, called upon and took her sister Anna, at Napoleon, with her. They traveled for some distance, but finally lost their way and were compelled to spend the cold, dreary night in the dismal forest, liable at any time to fall a prey to the wild beasts with which the woods were then filled. They finally sat down on a large log and remained there until morning. As the night passed they dreamed of being at their father's house, seated by a pleasant fire. In the morning they retraced their steps until they came to the path from whence the day before they had wandered. They were both weary and hungry. The provision they had brought with them had become so hard frozen that they could not eat it. Their feet, the day before, had become wet and their stockings were now frozen upon their feet. Yet, upon finding the path again, so glad were they, that they almost forgot their sufferings, from their fond hope of soon again seeing their home and dear friends. Soon after they found their way, they distinctly heard the stroke of an ax or tomahawk against a tree, and at once surmised it was done by an Indian. A few moments confirmed their suspicions. Looking forward, not ten rods distant, directly approaching them, on their path, a tall, athletic Indian, armed with knife and tomahawk. They were greatly alarmed, but determined to continue on their path, as no better alternative offered. He proved to be a young and friendly Indian, who, after in his language, asking them how far to next "wigwam" and receiving an answer from the girls in German, continued his course. They finally came in sight of their father's cabin, and upon nearing it, humble as it was, their hearts beat with joy, Catherine observing to Anna how beautifully the smoke ascended above their little home. After remaining a few days with their people, the two girls started again for Napoleon. Having got several miles into the woods, on their way, they saw the tracks of a huge bear in the freshly fallen snow, and were filled with consternation, expecting any moment to meet old Bruin himself. They had not proceeded far before they saw, at a considerable distance, in advance of them, an object in motion, resembling a human being, loaded down with clothes, put on in every conceivable shape. It was their sister Barbara, on her way home from Providence. She said she was sick and wanted the gentleman for whom she worked to bring her home. He refused, not wanting to lose her services. She determined to "go home sick or well" and accordingly bundled up her clothes and started on her journey of thirty miles. She, also lost her way. After wandering around for a long time she finally came in sight of a house, which upon approaching, she found unoccupied. It was now night, and she concluded to spend the night in the house. But it looked so desolate and lonely she feared to stay in it. Finding, her brother tells us, an old bake oven, she crawled into that, but fearing an attack by some wild beast, and that she would there be helpless, with no chance of escape, she came out, and sat all night on the house porch. To keep herself from freezing, she very prudently put on all the clothing she had. The next day, as above stated, she met her two sisters. They directed her to follow their tracks and assured her she would safely reach home, which she did."
